Test of Time

by Simon Dolgin

Time has a way of resolving issues. It does much more than that. It becomes the gauge by which to measure truths. Time separates the untrue from the true. What survives endures because it is couched in terms of truth that time tolerates. What is not substantiated by truth will not stand the test of time.

Further than that, solutions of time are real. They may defy logic, sometimes contradict all reason, but they become the facts that rational prognosis must accept as truth.

Let us start with the very existence of the Jewish people today. There is nothing original in the statement that the very existence of the people defies all logic. Over 1900 years ago the Roman Emperor Titus inscribed Judea capta est on his Arch of Triumph. "In every generation there are those who rise to destroy us," is written in the Haggada, which is at least a millennium and half old. Pogroms, holocausts, join homelessness to make Jewish survival inconceivable, improbable, unreal. Yet time proves the contrary. A people that spent more than half of its history outside the Land returns to it as the only force able to revive the Land, and restores its nationality to itself.

Vast segments of the Jewish people fell from its ranks either by coercion or by choice. Their rejection of its "truths" led them elsewhere. Yet the people, the entity known as Jews, still prevails despite the ravages of time.

Nor were all the forces that threatened Jewry's existence external ones. Internal deviations from its basic principles were espoused by sections of the people who left its truths and consequently also its ranks. Those who in biblical times turned to the Baal and Astarte; those who in Hasmonean days became Sadducees and Baytusim; then the Karaites, the Samaritans, followers of Shabtai Zvi and David Reuveni. Yes, even the movement of Haskala of the late 18th and 19th centuries. No movement deviating from normative, Pharasaic-Rabbinic Jewish truth has survived in the ranks of Jewry. Yet the Jewish people, despite these dissensions, still persists on the stage of time. Its "truth" gives it durability.

Within the range of Jewish experience are a multitude of developments that have withstood the tests of time, and thus seem to summon support for their truth. Let us take a few as representative of many more.

The Russian revolution, with its doctrines of atheism and anti-Semitism, sought to stamp out all vestiges of the Jewish religion. Its first attack was against the synagogue. Hundreds were closed. The relentless campaign developed yevsekis, a Jewish youth that denounced parents because they still honoured vestiges of their religious heritage. Jews were given the Yiddish theatre, a Yiddish newspaper and Birobidjan as a Jewish territory, to encourage a nationality separated from the Jewish past.

Time has played its part. The theatre and newspaper which the mighty Russian government endorsed for Jewish expression have withered. Birobidjan never really struck roots. The only Jewish institution that has survived as basic to Jewish identity is the synagogue: the first religious institution to be victimized and the last to keep functioning.

This strange fact, along with the inexplicable historic fact that Jews have comprised the only group to be allowed, in any measure, to leave Russia, reveals some special "truth" that contradicts logic.

How does one explain the phenomenon that Simhat Torah night – the least probable in the Jewish calendar – has become the time for special gatherings at Russian synagogues? This day has no message of freedom (like Pesach) or of a New Year (like Rosh Hashana-Yom Kippur). Yet is the time of Torah celebration, a Torah they do not know. Those desirous of being Jews study religious sources, seek to practise religious observance, learn Hebrew. All this in defiance of the powerful Soviet police state. Time and truth defy logic and world powers.

When I first arrived in Los Angeles in 1939, there were about 100,000 Jews in the community. There were Jews of all shades. The new generation, in its desire to adjust to the new world in which their parents were strangers, rejected the tradition of those parents. New developments came to the fore. The Jewish school system included about 20 secular Yiddish (Arbeiter Ring) and Labour Zionist schools, whose intention was to give a modern dimension to Jewish life. Today, with a Jewish population of about 600,000, there are no Yiddish or Labour Zionist schools. Time separated the truly Jewish from substitutes.

During the years of my sojourn there, I witnessed the violent opposition of Conservative and Reform rabbis and Community Council members to the Jewish day school. For years, educational funds were denied these schools. Today, there are Conservative and Reform day schools. Time seems to have revealed the day school as more "true" to the ideals of Jewish education.

Time has again rejected the logic that dictated the disintegration of Orthodoxy and its day schools. Time has decided that those opposed must yield to the "segregated" schools that the Orthodox initiated. Of course, these schools have not accepted the intense Torah learning of the classical day schools. Some, amongst these Conservative and Reform rabbis, marched with Martin Luther King in Alabama. Now they want the day school because it is free of the

MITOKU MACROBIOTIC

THE FINE ART OF TRADITIONAL FOOD

Like the finest painting or craft, each Mitoku Macrobiotic™ product is a masterpiece.

They are made from extraordinary ingredients. Almost all are organic, the purest and most natural we can find, the very best in all Japan. They are carefully made by hand with all the attention to detail that their time-honored recipes and traditional preparation demands. These foods are made in small quantities and cannot be hurried. Miso and Tamari require over a year to make; our Tsuyu Shoyu dipping sauce takes almost four full years.

Mitoku Macrobiotic products are simple and elegant. Each package tells the story, where it comes from and how it was made. The foods themselves are superb: premium Sun-Dried Seaweeds, Authentic Mirin, Brown Rice and Umeboshi Plum Vinegars, Donko Shiitake Mushrooms, Sakurai Pastas, Mochi, Tekka and much more. Each one is unique with a distinctly different gourmet quality you will taste immediately. They are the most delicious products of their kind in the world.

For Mitoku Macrobiotic the finest art of all is to create for you products of superior taste and health.

Truly, The Fine Art of Traditional Food.

Rachel, Grandmother of The Founder of Chabad

from the Memoirs of the Late Lubavitcher Rebbe of Blessed Memory

Deborah Leah's husband Rabbi Joseph Yitzchak was a native of Shareye, a small town in Mogilev. There were only about forty-five Jewish families in this little townlet.

As in many other small towns, they had a number of scholars, — young men who had married there and those fathers-in-law provided for them, so that they were free to devote their time to Torah-study. In this way, the spirit of the Torah permeated the place. But the majority of the residents were just ordinary uneducated Jews, whose height of literacy was that they could davven and recite a chapter of Tillim. A few, maybe, could also understand a chapter of the Chumash, but as already stated, the majority had had very little education at all and could barely read. These men could not even davven with a Minyan, but had to satisfy themselves with reciting the "Shema," "Shmone-Esray," and a few more important prayers which they knew by heart.

The Rav of Shareye was Rabbi Shmuel Akiba. His Torah knowledge was not particularly great, but to compensate for this, he was exceedingly pious. For a period of fifty years he had been fasting daily from Shabbos to Shabbos, and taking upon himself all sorts of penances. During the winter, he would roll, naked, in the snow, and during the summer, he would roll himself, naked, on nests of ants which bit him until they drew blood.

His father-in-law, Rabbi Chaim

Moshe of Pinchev, a disciple of Rabbi Yomtov Heller, the author of "Tosfos Yom-Tov," was Rav in Shareye before him. Rabbi Shmuel Akiba married the latter's eldest daughter. Because of his extreme orthodoxy, his father-in-law turned him into a preacher, and he began to preach sermons regularly.

His sermons were full of fire, and threw the fear of G-d into all his listeners, scholars and non-scholars alike. He always painted lurid pictures of the punishment that awaited those who did not adhere strictly to the precepts of the Torah. After his father-in-law's death, he stepped into his position as Rav of the town, continuing with his fasts, his penances, and with his fiery sermons which positively curdled the blood of his audience.

Like all scholars of his time, he remained aloof from the uneducated Jews, and so these unfortunate people had no one to guide them, and certainly no one who thought it worth while to spend any time in teaching them.

One of these uneducated Jews in Shareye was a certain Jacob Kerpil who made his living by travelling in the surrounding villages, returning home for Shabbos. Before going home to his wife, he would always first call on the Rav of Shareye, and give him donations to the various local charities. For, Shareye, like other such Jewish communities, had its Society for Sick-Visiting, Society for Helping Poor Brides, Society for Clothing Poor People, Talmud-

Torah, etc., etc. Having given what he could to the Rav in support of these charities, Jacob Kerpil would then make his way to the Beth-Hamidrash where he would throw some coins into the charity-box which stood there, so that he would also be complying with the Mitzvah of "giving charity anonymously," for naturally no one knew who, or how much anyone put into this charity-box. Only after all this, did Jacob Kerpil go home and make himself ready for Shabbos.

As we already know, Jacob Kerpil was one of those uneducated people who could not properly read. He could only davven insofar as he could repeat the prayers he knew by heart, and these were the "Sh'ma," and the "Shmone-Esray" which he had learned with great difficulty during the course of the years. Although he repeated these prayers with many mistakes, he nevertheless put all his heart and soul into them, whether he happened to be wandering about in the villages, or in the Beth-Hamidrash on Shabbos or Yomtov.

His wife Tzippe Brocho was as uneducated as her husband and equally as devout. She was the daughter of the attendant at the local baths. She was orphaned at an early age, and the community cared for her and arranged her marriage with Jacob Kerpil. They were very happy in their marriage, but unfortunately had trouble regarding children. For quite a long time they were childless, and later, when Tzippe Brocho bore her husband children, they died.

Once during Jacob Kerpil's travels through the villages, he met a man who was travelling like himself, so they decided to travel together. Jacob noticed that the man kept moving his lips and murmuring something, as if talking to himself. Finally Jacob plucked up courage and asked him what he was doing, to which his companion replied that he was repeating Mishnayoth which he had learned by heart.

"I always do this when I am on the road without any books with me," he said. "As soon as I reach any place where there is a Beth-Hamidrash, I can then study Gemoro and other holy books, but I know T'nach and Mishnayoth by heart."

Now that Jacob Kerpil knew what his companion was murmuring so secretly, the latter began to repeat his studies in a loud voice and with a most beautiful tune which captured Jacob's heart. Jacob began to sob.

"Why are you crying?" his companion asked him sympathetically.

"How then can I not cry when I realize what a terrible ignoramus I am. I can barely read properly, let alone study. How I envy you your knowledge and learning!" cried out Jacob Kerpil emotionally.

The stranger looked at him kindly and comforted him, promising he would teach him from the very beginning of the "Aleph-Beth" as soon as they would reach Shareye and Jacob would be at home. Jacob was moved beyond expression, and his eyes said all that his lips could not say, for his heart was very full.

"I will do this for you on one condition only," said the stranger, whose name was Hersh Leib. "No one must know anything about it!"

He made an exception in the case of Jacob's wife, and Tzippe Brocho was allowed to be a party to the secret. Jacob could not understand why the stranger wanted to keep the matter so quiet, but he was so overjoyed, at his kindness, that he would have agreed to whatever conditions he wanted.

When they reached Shareye, a season of bad weather set in which kept Jacob at home. Hersh Leib therefore began the lesson with his eager pupil, and little by little, Jacob made progress. After a couple of months he could read very nicely and even learned the meaning of many of the words. Jacob Kerpil was absolutely thrilled, and his wife felt positively proud of her husband.

Meanwhile Hersh Leib remained at the Beth-Hamidrash, and as his appearance was not particularly striking in any way, no one took any notice of him, taking him to be an ordinary Jew like any of such Jews who constituted the majority in Shareye. Hersh Leib asked nothing of anybody, and no one offered him anything, until Erev-Shabbos came along, when he was invited to have a meal. He declined with thanks, saying he never ate at strangers' tables. With that, all interest in him was lost, and no one asked him even what had brought him to the town, nor how he supported himself.

Hersh Leib had learned all about the local Jews from Jacob Kerpil, and so he knew that the vast majority of them were ignorant. Hersh Leib began to befriend these Jews, paying them such attention, cheering them and comforting them so that they felt uplifted. He put a new spirit into them and they looked forward to the future with new hope.

"No Jew need feel downcast or suffer from an inferiority complex even if he is not a scholar," Hersh Leib would say to each one of them. "G-d loves all of his chosen people. When he commanded Moses to 'speak to the children of Israel,' he made no distinction between one Jew and another." Hersh Leib also encouraged these uneducated Jews by telling them that though their education had been neglected in their youth, this was no reason why they could not begin to study now. It was never too late for a Jew to begin to study.

These Jews looked at him in surprise, for did he not know that no one had ever thought them worthy of attention. He assured them that he would be happy to teach them from the very beginning.

They were so delighted, they could hardly believe the evidence of their own ears! They knew that there were scholars studying at the Beth-Hamidrash, but they? — Well now they too would study! They gladly became Hersh Leib's pupils, with earnest hopes that they would attain success!

On the outskirts of Shareye there was a small Beth-Hamidrash known as "Zalman's Beth-Hamidrash," because a certain Feivel Zalman had had this Beth-Hamidrash built, hoping thereby to become worthy of having children. It was in this particular Beth-Hamidrash that the stranger, Hersh Leib, began his lesson with his new pupils, the poor, neglected, uneducated Jews of Shareye. He began to teach them the "Aleph-Beth," and they immediately felt uplifted. They were studying! Beautiful thought! They were also elevated and encouraged to think that someone was showing such a great interest in them, and actually thought it worth while to spend time in teaching them!

For five years Hersh Leib continued these lessons without a break. A number of his pupils made remarkable progress. He taught them not only how to read and translate, but also how to live on a higher spiritual and moral plane. He told them they must not curse, must not fly into a temper, and must not quarrel.

During all this time, Hersh Leib did not accept a penny from anyone. Neither did he eat at anyone's table whether during weekdays, Shabbos or Yomtov. When he was not teaching his pupils, he studied himself. And obviously he had his own means, for he supported himself and was completely independent.

It was naturally soon public knowledge that a stranger had installed himself in "Zalman's Beth-Hamidrash," and was teaching the uneducated Jews of the town, just as if they were small children coming to Cheder. The Rav of Shareye, Rabbi Shmuel Akiba, also heard of it, and acknowledged it as a great feat.

One day, the Rav decided to go to this Beth-Hamidrash and see for himself what was going on there. He came in the middle of Hersh Leib's lesson. The latter had about a dozen Jews sitting around him at the table, some of them old Jews with grey beards, and he was teaching them as he would young children.

When they saw the Rav enter the Beth-Hamidrash, Hersh Leib and his "class" all stood up deferentially. The Rav came up to Hersh Leib and offered him his hand. He thanked him for all he was doing for these Jews of Shareye. The Rav was obviously so grateful to him, that he kissed his hand! All the onlookers were greatly impressed.

The Rav then gave them a short sermon about the great importance of what Hersh Leib was doing for them. He told them this parable:

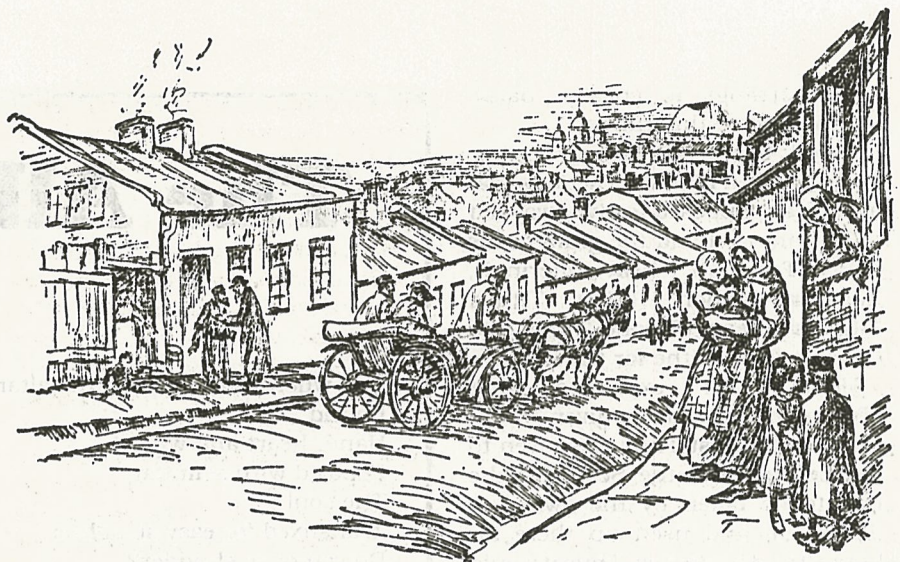

"There was once a king who was wise and good. His virtues were so many that there was none to equal him in the whole world. He loved his subjects very much and cared for all their needs. In order that they could come to him with their problems, he appointed times, thrice daily, when each and everyone could approach him and ask him whatever they wanted.

"In one part of his country there was a section where only dumb people lived; none of them was able to speak, so none was able to come to the king and tell him or ask him about their problems. This naturally grieved them very much. Then one day a great physician appeared who promised them that he would cure them of their dumbness, and give them the power of speech. By his exceptional wisdom and ability, he did, in fact, achieve what he promised them.

"The king saw this great wonder, when one day his dumb subjects who were now able to speak, came to him with the problems which had for years been weighing so heavily upon their hearts. The king not only readily granted these poor creatures all that they now asked of him, but also called this great physician who had cured them of their sad affliction, and rewarded him with costly gifts."

The Rav of Shareye, having clothed his thought in the foregoing parable, now turned to Hersh Leib's pupils and said to them:

"My friends, all these years you have been like dumb people. You could neither read nor understand the prayers. You served the Almighty in silence and with sorrow in your hearts; till this great physician Hersh Leib came to you and opened your eyes and taught you to speak, bringing new life into you. You can now act and conduct yourselves as good Jews should, and may the Almighty bless you all and fulfill your desires and requests, and those of all Israel. Amen."

Despite this open acknowledgment by the Rav of Shareye of the wonderful good that Hersh Leib was doing, there were yet some scholars in the town who could not forgive such goings-on. How dare this stranger come interfering in matters which were no concern of his! They had been used to regarding themselves as a class above these ignorant Jews. They had always naturally looked down upon them. And now here was this man teaching them, so that they now began to have a better opinion of themselves and to regard themselves almost as equals of others! The class-distinction was being broken and the barriers were coming down!

The animosity of these scholars towards Hersh Leib increased because of the following occurrence. The Porush Rabbi Elye Shmuel was working hard on a certain section of the Talmud. He could not get the matter clear even though he asked his scholarly friends if they could help him. But though they all spent days poring over the problem, they could not get beyond it and were just "stuck" there, failing to understand the meaning of it.

Then Hersh Leib came along, heard what was puzzling them, and without any effort or difficulty whatever, he told them the answer which cleared the whole problem.

This angered these scholars so much, that they began to look for faults in Hersh Leib. They tried very hard, but could find nothing against him. He was in truth a very fine person. In desperation they hit upon a nickname for him. "Ginger," they called him on account of his blond hair.

Meanwhile the friendship between Hersh Leib and Jacob Kerpil, who was really the cause of Hersh Leib coming to Shareye and doing so much good there, increased daily. Jacob took every opportunity of studying under the guidance of his esteemed friend and teacher, and within the course of two years had made wonderful progress in his studies. It now transpired that the one-time ignorant Jacob Kerpil who could barely read a word, had a really good aptitude for learning, and it was now being developed.

During this time Jacob Kerpil's business had also greatly improved, and both he and his wife attributed it to the fact that, on the advice of Hersh Leib, they were now putting aside one-tenth of their earnings for charity. Hersh Leib was very keen on the virtue of charity, much more so than about other virtues. He always impressed upon his adult pupils the importance of contributing one-tenth of their earnings to charity.

Jacob Kerpil had always been generous when it came to helping anyone less fortunate than himself. He had supported poorer relatives, and in fact any poor person was always sure to receive open-handed assistance from him. But when his "teacher" Hersh Leib explained the importance of giving one-tenth of one's earnings to charity, Jacob readily followed this ruling.

Jacob heard for the first time about the four kinds of fractions that a Jew was supposed to give away out of his vineyard and the grain of his fields: "Terumah" ("Heave Offering"), "Maaser Rishon" (First Tithe), "Maaser Sheni" (Second Tithe) and "Maaser Oni" (Tithe for the Poor).

Hersh Leib explained that "Terumah" used to be given to the priests; the First Tithe was given to the Levites, and the Second Tithe had to be taken by the owner to Jerusalem and used up there for himself and his family. Thus it would seem that these four kinds of Tithes were only applicable to the Jews when they lived in the Holy Land. However, the last Tithe referred to, applied to Jews living all over the world, and it is incumbent upon every Jew everywhere, to carry out this duty of giving away one-tenth of his money to the poor. There is no way in which he can regard himself as free of this obligation.

Hersh Leib had told Jacob Kerpil so many stories from the Gemoro and Midrash about this matter of giving away "Maaser," that his imagination was kindled, and he made up his mind that he would certainly carry it out.

Jacob was particularly impressed by the fact that Hersh Leib told him this would bring him success, and when he later succeeded in doing better business, he naturally attributed it to his innovation of giving away one-tenth of his earnings to the poor.

Jacob Kerpil and his wife were without children, and this grieved them very much. But never by so much as a word or sign did they complain about it to Hersh Leib, or show any grudge against the Almighty. Jacob tried to console himself for his childlessness by looking after the children of his sister, who was a widow, and those of his brother, who was a sick man and could not support his family.

Jacob was so selfless in his care of his dependent relatives that by the time he had married off their daughters and paid for the education of their sons, he had very little left for himself.

The Albatross

by Bernard Dov Milians

And when you see us on the altar
Bound
Hand, heart and whole,
Impaled with scimitar.
The soul
Transfixed for easy slaughter.
Do you once shudder?
Utter once
A tiny sigh? A stifled syllable
Of whimper-sympathy?

And when you see
The headman's pike-axe
Strike us,
Hack
In dreadful
Fury of insanity.
Do you once blench?
Once clench
A fist, aghast
At men's such brute-enrooted
Inhumanity?

No, you stare past
In unconcern:
A paste-face smiling
Golem you,
Across
Whose love-belying
Truth-defiling
Twist of lip
Our hearts discern
Your inmost glee
That we,
Your albatross,
At last
—Long last—
Were dying.

How, Dear Our L-rd,
Can kin and kind
Pour
Searing ash-dung
On a soaring Spirit?
Slash
Rarest heirlooms?
Dash
Brother-dreams,
And smother harmony

Yet still declare us fellow?
How?
How
Can kinsmen stand
Unfeeling, fell,
And reach us out no haven?
Not tender us a hearth? A saving
Hand
In our most dire profundis?
How can
They thus
Fuel mournfulness
In furnaces of fulsome felony
And,
Scornful,
Gloat
While tomes and troves of beauteous
psalmody
That
The flares and flourishes of endlessyesterdays
Of Jewish Soul
Created,
Are hellishly
Cremated?

How?

We pray
It were not so,
But, How?
How can
They thus!

Dear, Dearest L-rd,
—Say
Woe:
Woe You:
Woe us!—
You fashioned all-too-human clay
To image the Celestial.
Your purposed Man
Is crass,
Is soulless-cruel:
Your Man, alas
Alas,
At best
Is bestial!!!

KEEPING KOSHER by Rabbi Bernard Levy

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE:

The O.K. LABORATORIES has NEVER given a Hechsher on any wine alcohol. It has endorsed ONLY synthetic alcohol produced from ethylene gas.

It is absurd to think that Rabbi Levy would permit the O.K. LABORATORIES to endorse an alcohol produced from non-Kosher wine.

An article dealing in depth and in detail with all facets of this issue which is of grave concern to the Kosher Community—including the matter of unacceptable vinegar—is in preparation and will shortly be available to our readers and all other interested persons.

Rabbi Zvi Gartenhaus is the author of the following articles on BROCHOS – MEZONOS FOODS. They are being reprinted in response to numerous requests from HOMEMAKER readers.

Blessings on Mezonos Foods —Cereals

The Torah teaches us that there is a special after-blessing for bread which is called Birchas Hamazon. Somewhat similar to this is a blessing called Me'en Sholosh which is recited after partaking of the seven special foods that Eretz Yisroel is known for. It is called by this name since it contains the three major blessings of Birchas Hamazon but in an abbreviated form. Five of these foods are fruits of the tree which are: dates, figs, pomegranates, olives and grapes. These require a blessing called Al Hoetz with the exception of wine made out of grapes which requires Al Hagefen. The other two are wheat and barley which requires the after blessing Al Hamichyo, but only when processed either by cooking or baking. This is because wheat and barley, differing from the other five special foods, attain importance only when cooked or baked. The blessing before partaking of such foods is Boreh Meaney Mezonos as they offer "Mazon," sustenance to one's body. Of course, bread is of an even higher degree of importance as its blessing is Hamotzee and Birchas Hamazon. Cake is an example of grain processed by baking which requires Mezonos rather than Hamotzee for reasons we will discuss later B'EZHA.

There are three other types of grain which are in the family of wheat and barley and have the same laws applying to them. They are: oats, spelt and rye. If the five species of grain are edible in their raw form the blessing before partaking of them is Hoadomo and its after blessing is Boreh Nefashos. When they are cooked or roasted in their entirety and the original grain was not crushed or reduced to a smaller size the blessing is still Hoadomo. The five species of grain do not attain their significance of Mauzon until they are cooked long enough to be crushed and reduced to a smaller size. Only when this occurs does it acquire its name Maase K'deira—foods processed by cooking—and require Mezonos.

Some examples of these Mezonos foods are: Cereals, noodles, spaghetti and farfel. Dry cereals made of the five species of grain require a Mezonos as well.

Two examples of these are Grape Nut Flakes and Raisin Bran Flakes of Post. Grape Nut Flakes should not be mistaken for Grape Nut Cereal. The latter is actually made from bread which is processed into little pieces in a form of a cereal and therefore requires Hamotzee as it does not lose its significance of bread. However, Grape Nut Flakes and Raisin Bran Flakes are parts of the wheat kernel which are cooked and formed into flake form and therefore require Mezonos. A separate blessing on the raisins is not to be recited since the cereal is the main food and the raisins are only subordinate.

When the five species of grain are ground into flour and then cooked or baked, the blessing would of course be Mezonos as well. Two examples of Post cereals of this sort which are cooked are Alpha Bits and Crispy Critters whose main ingredient is oat flour and therefore require a Mezonos. Fortified Oat Flakes is another example of such a Mezonos cereal. By the way this cereal contains milk.

Another example of a dry cereal which requires Mezonos is Rice Krinkles. Rice is not one of the five species of grain but since it supplies Mazon to one's body when cooked, a Mezonos is required. However, its after blessing is Borei Nefashos and not Al Hamichyo as is required after partaking of the five species of grain. Other examples of such Post Cereals are Pebbles Cocoa and Pebbles Fruity since the major ingredient is rice.

Corn Flakes cereals such as Post Toasties, Sugar Sparkled Flakes, Pink Panther Flakes require a Borei Pri Hoadomo since they are made by steam cooking the original corn kernel and then formed into flakes. Though it does not look like the original kernel it is still considered a Pri Hoadomo as long as it is not ground into flour form. Pop Corn is also an example of a food which is still considered in its original form though it does not look like it to the human eye.

Potato Chips and Corn Chips also require a Borei Pri Hoadomo. However, Potato Chips which are made by grinding the potato into flour and then formed into chips require a Shehakol. Potato Blintzes (without flour) require Hoadomo while potato kugel and latkes require Shehakol where potatoes are finely grated.

The Halacha states that a cooked or baked food which contains one of the five species of grain as one of its ingredients, even if it is not the major ingredient, requires a Mezonos since it gives taste to the food. One important exception to this law is a food which contains one of the five species of grain only for the purpose of keeping it together and not to give taste. This is true in Post's Honeycomb cereal and in the orange cereal rings of Super Orange Crisp which contain a small percentage of oat flour only to keep the texture of the cereal together and not to give taste. The major ingredient is corn flour and therefore requires a Shehakol.

The Super Sugar Crisp cereal which contains wheat puffs is made by taking the original kernel of wheat and "exploding" it to a greater size. The original kernel is "pearled" meaning that most of the bran or shell is removed. During the process, the puffed wheat then goes through steam heat and opens up to enable it to soften so that other ingredients such as sweetener and oils can be absorbed. The process of "exploding" may be considered cooking and would require Mezonos since the kernel is pearled and not in its complete form. If, however, it is merely a form of roasting, the pearling itself would not render it Mezonos, nor would the final steaming process do so since it does not change the kernel from its original character but merely prepares it to be coated with sweeteners. Where possible both Mezonos and Hoadomo should be recited on other foods—until such time as the nature of exploding can be determined.

Footnote: It is noteworthy that in all books dealing with Brochos puffed wheat is considered Mezonos. Wheat germ requires a Shehakol only if it is ground fine like flour. However, if it is not so fine Hoadomo is recited since it did not lose its original shape. Candied wheat germ requires a Mezonos if it is cooked.

Cakes and Mezonos Rolls

The Halacha states that there are two different types of Mezonos foods. Both, of course, contain one of the five species of grain: wheat, barley, oats, rye, spelt. One, however, is processed by cooking or maasei kdeira, and one is baked like bread such as cake or pas ha-baah b'kisin.

An important difference between cakes and maase kdeira is that the latter always requires Mezonos no matter how much you eat while the former sometimes requires Hamotzee. Since cake is baked like bread it is in the category of pas except for the fact that it is not the usual manner of people to eat it as a meal, rather it is eaten as a snack or dessert. However, if one does sit down to a meal of cake he must wash, recite Hamotzee and Birchas Hamazon. Therefore Mezonos is recited on pizza when one eats one slice or more. If one eats three slices he must wash and recite Hamotzee. If one eats two slices the requirement is questionable, therefore it would be advisable to avoid a situation of questionable recitation of Brochos and not eat two slices. To have an approximation of how much cake or cookies one can partake of without being required to wash and recite Hamotzee, one can fill up a standard teacup with cake. This is equal to about a measure of four eggs of cake. The sugar content of cake should not be included in the measure and the air or fluff of the cake need not be compacted.

Mezonos Bread At Affairs

The Halacha specifically states that if one partakes of cakes or mezonos bread together with a regular meal of fish, meat, etc., he must wash and recite Hamotzee and Birchas Hamazon even on a lesser amount than we mentioned above. As long as the amount of cake that one is eating equals approximately the amount of bread that one would eat at such a meal, it is the same as if he were eating a regular meal which requires Hamotzee. This would not be less than the size of an egg. For example, if the approximate amount of bread that one would eat with a regular meal is two slices, when substituting cake or mezonos bread for the bread one must wash and recite Hamotzee and Birchas Hamazon. Therefore, it is not correct when people at affairs eat mezonos bread (even if it has been prepared correctly, using the right percentage of fruit juices or another halachically acceptable liquid in place of water) without washing. The same is true of meals served on planes with mezonos bread. My father-in-law, Rabbi Bernard Levy, a frequent plane traveler, has told me that he usually eats the meal without the mezonos bread and an hour or two later he eats the mezonos bread as a snack after which he recites Mezonos. The same is true with frankfurter mezonos rolls. If one is partaking of one hot dog or roll just as a snack he can recite a Mezonos on the roll if it is truly a mezonos roll, baked according to Halacha. But, if he is eating a regular meal with other foods, Hamotzee is required. If three slices are eaten, Hamotzee is required even when eaten alone. Again, a situation of questionable recitation of Brochos by eating two slices should be avoided.

Referring back to mezonos foods, we must examine those which are baked like bread yet require only mezonos. Cake, of course, is made of flour and water plus other ingredients and is therefore called pas haboa b'kisin, bread with fillings. The common question asked is what makes cake different than bread, and the answer to this question can be understood by explaining that there are three different types of cake. The first type is made as a regular dough, like bread, but it is filled with other ingredients such as honey, sugar, nuts, spices and baked in the manner of bread. Since the taste of the filling is much more dominant than the taste of the dough its blessing is no longer Hamotzee but rather Mezonos.

The second type is one in which the original batter is mixed with other ingredients besides flour and water so that more than just the flour is strongly recognizable to the taste. Here again the blessing is Mezonos since such a pas, or bread, is not usually eaten with a meal as plain bread is, rather as dessert or a snack.

When a baker wishes to bake

a Mezonos roll he must make sure that the original batter contains a lot of another liquid besides water so that the taste is easily distinguishable from that of a plain roll. However, if only a little apple cider is added to make the roll a little sweeter its blessing would still be Hamotzee just as with raisin challah whose taste is sweetened through the addition of the raisins.

The third type of "cake" or pas haboa b'kisin is one which is made from flour and water but is made very thin and dry and is not used for eating but just to nibble on or as a snack. An example of this is the very thin wafer-like crackers. Matzoh does not enter into this category as it is used for eating at a meal; therefore it requires Hamotzee. Thin bread toast sold in packages is also regular pas and requires Hamotzee. The reason why Tam-Tams and other types of crackers require only Mezonos is because they enter the second category of cake since there are other ingredients mixed in the original batter besides flour and water.

The Purifying Waters

*Is it true only oppressed Orthodox Jewish women use the mikveh?
Surprisingly, the feminist stereotype just won't wash.*

by RUTH ROVNER

Part I Highlights

Of the 613 commandments in Jewish life, 3 are exclusively for women: lighting candles, taking the first cake of bread, observing the laws of ritual purity.

A wife is considered a Niddah with the onset of her menstrual flow. Sexual relations are forbidden for a minimum of 12 days: 5 days for the menses to end followed by 7 consecutive clean days. At the end of this time she goes to a mikveh for ritual cleansing that removes her Niddah state and permits the renewal of sexual relationships. The abstinent period can last beyond 12 days if a menstrual irregularity occurs.

"To me," more than a few women have testified, "the ritual of Mikveh raises life from the everyday to the spiritual. There is no difficulty in accepting the ritual purity laws. They give your everyday life higher meaning. . . . And, in restraint, we find increased enjoyment."

"Taking a 30-minute bath is a great luxury with three children and a full-time job!" said one. "And putting on the sheet right before you go to mikveh - it's worn toga-style - is a great fantasizing experience."

"I spend a lot of time preparing for mikveh, and it relaxes me," said another. "It puts me in the mood for the experience - and I'm also thinking that my husband and I will soon be reunited."

For some, though not all, the immersion itself can be a deeply moving experience.

"I feel very fresh and tingly, though not just in a physical way," said one. "It's something very special, because I'm doing this just for me and my husband. There are so many things I do for my children, my friends, others - but this is just for the two of us."

"My first time at the mikveh? I'll never forget it," reminisced a woman whose oldest child is now 23. "I had learned all the details on my own, but they made me kind of uneasy. Then, the night before the wedding, I went, and what a feeling! It was some kind of holiness, elevation, I can't really explain it - but I knew I felt very different. And I still get that feeling when I go to mikveh. I've been going for 25 years."

"The first time, I felt very anxious, because it wasn't really a part of my family experience," said one woman. "I felt unsure, nervous that I wouldn't get all the details right. But I felt a deep emotional connection to my Jewishness-a sense of something very spiritual happening. It gives me a sense of spiritual renewal - stronger than I ever feel in a synagogue."

"It's definitely not a sense of being cleansed from menstruation," said one woman emphatically, echoing a thought stressed by many women. Yet it is this association of menstruation and mikveh - and the seemingly elaborate emphasis on the removal of menstrual blood-that other women seem unable to accept.

The origin of mikveh goes back to Leviticus: "And if a woman have an issue and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be in her impurity seven days." Later, when the laws were codified, details were elaborated. During the seven day period, the woman is expected to examine herself internally twice daily. If any spot of blood appears anywhere during the seven days, the count must start all over again. If she sees discharge of uncertain origin - i.e. not necessarily menstrual - she is supposed to consult a rabbi who makes the legal determination.

This is the kind of detail that sets some feminist teeth on edge. Jewish feminists often deplore the apparent preoccupation with the woman's menstrual state. Some see echoes of primitive taboos against menstruation. Jewish women editors who compiled an anthology on the Jewish woman for Response magazine, wrote: "It is difficult to avoid the implication that we are dealing here with the potent residue of an ancient taboo based on a mixture of male fear, awe, and repugnance towards woman's creative biological cycle."

But those who are knowledgeable about Jewish law and tradition often assert that the laws involve a highly sophisticated symbolism. It centers on two basic Jewish concepts, tumah and tahara (loosely translated as unclean and clean, or pure and impure). The menstruant is tumah (impure) and has to purify herself through mikveh, but so did men in the Temple days, who had been in contact with certain "impurities." What all the states of tumah had in common was some touch with death.

A menstruating woman is not impure because of her body, the theory goes, but because she, too, has this "whisper of death." Because the blood was potential life when in her womb, it is a token of dying - a potential loss of life - when shed.

Rachel Adler is a PhD candidate at Berkeley, and enough of a feminist to be one of the guest speakers at the first national Jewish feminist conference. She is married and Orthodox, and when she goes to mikveh, she sees something far different from hygienic cleansing of an unclean body. She sees a symbolic reenactment of death and rebirth.

"The mikveh simulates the original living water, the amniotic tide on which the unborn child is rocked. To be reborn, one must enter this womb and 'drown' in living water."

In contrast to Ms. Adler's symbolic way of viewing her mikveh experience, other women reply simply: "I do it because God commanded me to." For any Orthodox Jew, this is the ultimate and valid answer, since they believe the laws are God-given and thus to be accepted unequivocally.

A visit to a mikveh is pervaded with modesty and discretion. When husbands drive their wives, they do not park facing the door of the mikveh. For the woman, going to the mikveh is totally anonymous - no screening, no questions, or names. She simply waits her turn, prepares and then immerses, then pays a small fee and leaves. Conceivably any woman could use a mikveh, though it is intended only for brides-to-be or married Jewish women.

At the local mikveh, a cheerful but discreet atmosphere pervades. The women relax, read, or talk casually, while waiting their turns. On an average evening, about four women will come, some from as far as Trenton or Atlantic City.

The facilities include a small waiting room, three individual rooms for baths and showers, all gleamingly clean and equipped with soap, towels, comb, nail file and scissors, polish remover, dental floss, shampoo - everything needed for total preparation. There also is a separate room with hair-drying facilities and mirrors.

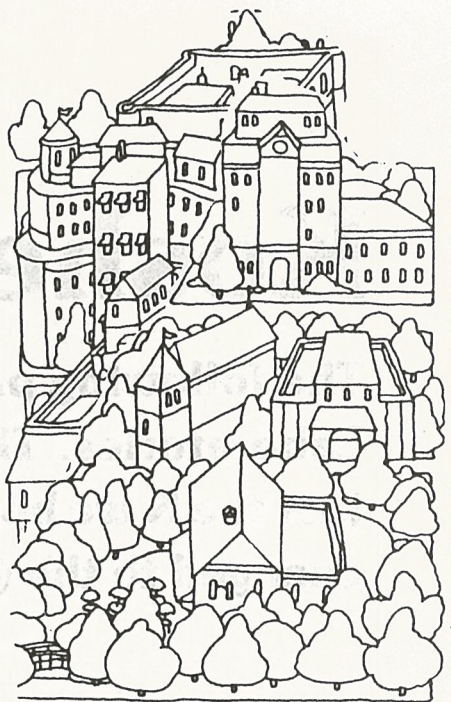

A bustling attendant oversees it all. She answers buzzers, brings towels, supervises the immersion for each woman, and what she is especially known for - declares "Kosher!" when the woman has completed the immersion properly.

Every mikveh looks much like every other, because of the ancient building requirements. But facilities surrounding it can be quite plush. A few mikvehs, in California, for example, are almost like swank health salons, with plush carpets, dressing rooms with private bathrooms, the latest model hair-dryers.

Even more luxurious are the private mikvehs, including at least one in Philadelphia. Nothing in Jewish law prevents this, as long as the mikveh is properly constructed (and a whole tractate of the Talmud is devoted to proper requirements for the mikveh).

"It's always been my fantasy to have my own mikveh right in my basement," confessed one woman who has often gone to some lengths to get to mikveh in 25 years of using them.

Women past and present have surmounted imposing obstacles to use a mikveh. When a modern couple was stationed for military service in Greenland, the wife took a plane every month to use a mikveh. A Scandinavian woman, now living in Philadelphia, remembers how her mother would go each month to a lake, dig a hole into the ice, and immerse herself (all natural bodies of water - rivers, lakes, streams - are acceptable mikvehs). "I thought she was doing it because she enjoyed it, that it was a health procedure," she recalls now. "Only later I realized it was for ritual purity." (Some European women are especially "modest" about their ritual.)

Another woman in Philadelphia has a friend recently emigrated from Russia, who described how the Soviets have repeatedly closed down mikvehs on the pretense they have contaminated water; Russian mikvehs tend to be especially secretive.

In medieval times mikvehs were an integral part of Jewish centers and synagogues and often were built below ground. The oldest medieval mikvehs have been uncovered in Germany, and one in Cologne dates from 1170. The most typical is in Worms. It's a subterranean building with 19 steps leading down to the entrance hall, and then another 11 steps to the mikveh itself.

In past times, the mikveh was so important that if a community did not have adequate funds, the building of a mikveh took priority over the building of a synagogue because family life has always been so essential in Jewish tradition.

A Tail of Time

Time speeds forth
And I pursue
Headlong, as most mortals do
Snatching
Catching at its tail,
Knowing certain I must fail
To match
Its breathless streaking haste:
Knowing I will be outpaced.

... And I plead:
"Stay, time. Stand still.
Wait till I have done His will;
Till my hand
Has joined in hand
With men's hearts that understand;
Till I learn—for I would know—
How the seed
I plant will grow!"

*Oh Man!
Oh Mite!*

All hail!
All hale
Oh man, oh mite!
So great you are
In selfish sight
So strong and tall;
So knowing-wise:
A sage and saint
In your own eyes!
So wholly holy you,
You think:
An angel standing on the brink
Of Heaven you, and truly proud
That you can hip-hop moon-to-cloud
And proffer Heaven your advice
In greater measures than suffice!

Oh, man you are, and hearty-hale.
But...health, to say the least, is frail,
And wisdom may be otherwise
Than sage, when you are cut to size.

And, as for pride: it's known by all,
It fells the fools
Who stand too tall!

In Thy Hand

We put our morrow
In Thy hand
And pray that, as today,
Thy blessing will imbue our all
With bounty that we may recall Through night and noon, and dawn
and eve,
In thanks for what our hearts receive,
Long years, along the way.

Test of Time

black integration for which they once marched. They have adopted the day school because of its segregation, a far less noble reason than what motivated the Orthodox, who pioneered the day school as essential to Jewish survival.

The battle against Jewish assimilation and intermarriage becomes more critical from day to day. The spiritual holocaust is more threatening than ever. All this comes after five decades of accommodation to Jewish youth. Temples of majestic size and beauty were erected. Youth programmes were developed at great expense. Compromises on observance were made—all to attract the youth. Yet assimilation increases.
Time apparently rejects these trends
even as it did previous deviationists.
Orthodoxy in America and its day schools are the only bulwark against erosion that time seems to accept.

Rabbi Dolgin is a former director-general of the Ministry for Religious Affairs.

There is no sorrow
When Thy hand
Is placed, in bracha, on our head,
And Heaven, in compassion, shed
Its ray of love, whose soft caresses
Soothe the sighs of our distresses
And give new spirit when our fire,
If smoulders, threatens to expire.

How warm a heart embraced can feel!
How quick the Quickened prayerful hearts reveal
That You are One, through time to be,
And we are ever one with Thee!

The Purifying Waters

Mikvehs are an ancient and unbroken tradition extending as far back as Biblical times. The most modern mikveh does not look much different from the most ancient, since they are constructed according to the same requirements of Jewish law.

On the top of a high hill in Masada, in Israel today, stand the remains of the oldest extant mikveh, evoking the flavor of 20 centuries past.
Masada, once a palace of the Roman King Herod, later became a fortress, the last hold-out by a small band of Jews while the Romans were destroying the Temple. That was in 70 C.E.(Common Era), and even in those desperate times, Jewish women were using the mikveh.

"Seeing it was an incredible experience," said a woman who has visited it twice. "I was more moved by that sight than by the Wailing Wall. It looked so exactly like the mikvehs I've used. It was amazing to know that Jewish women then were observing the same laws, in the very same ways, that I am doing today. Suddenly I felt this tremendous feeling of continuity; I felt emotionally related to all the Jewish women in our history."
